

Deal or no deal? The developers of the LeMoyne Manor project is offering the town of Salina a compromised redevelopment plan. Hailey Rene (reh-NAY) says the Town of Salina is looking optimistic .

(TRACK 1)

Longley-Jones, the developer of the LeMoyne Manor redevelopment project, is proposing to downsize their plan to build 90 luxury apartments overlooking Onondaga lake. Town Supervisor Mark Nicotra says the town board are considering changing the zoning laws in order for the project to be completed.

[TAKE SOT

DURATION:0'08"]

<" I think with them coming back with proposing 45 units, i think the board is certainly more inclined to approve it than they were a few weeks ago.">

(Track 2)

Although town code has limited the density of Longley-Jones's plans, Director of Development Scott Dumas says the company hopes to make the lake a centerpiece for the town, with apartments that compliment its values.

[TAKE SOT

DURATION:0'09"]

<" We have this upcoming town meeting, and from that we will start fresh with the planning board and try to talk design, and see if we can still put this thing together. ">

(Track 3)

The Town Board of Salina hopes to discuss the future of the LeMoyne Manor Development plans at their meeting on Monday.

Hailey Rene, N-C-C News.