

Widman:

How would you sum up this basketball season for the men's team so far?

Noone:

Um, this season has been an interesting one, man. Uh, I would, I would say it was mostly a positive season. It's been mostly positive seasons so far. I'm starting with a Taurean Thompson and Geno Thorpe leaving the team. I didn't think this season would be a productive one, but fortunately some of the young guys like Sidibe, Dolezaj, and Brissett have really surprised me. So I'm glad to see those young guys producing.

Widman:

And how are you feeling about the team's tournament chances with selection Sunday and mere five days away?

Noone:

I'm not sure what to make of the team's tournament odds. Every time I think that they're gonna win, they lose and vice versa. So, um, I guess the best thing is just to keep an open mind about it and hope they beat Wake on next Tuesday.

Widman:

Absolutely. And uh, what do you think [inaudible] has to do? You mentioned being awake, but do you think that's enough? Like what else do you think has, has to do to get into the tournament or do you think they're already at?

Noone:

Um, they're definitely not in, not by a long shot. Um, I mean the minimum would be that win against Wake and in the second round them beating UNC. Um, obviously that's, that's a pipe dream, but um, you know, this is Syracuse basketball, so it's nothing we're not used to.

Widman:

And what has been the best moment or what has been your personally, your personal favorite moment of the season?

Noone:

Um, this one might be a bit general, but just watching Tyus, battle play. Um, he's just a great athlete. Great all-around player. An even better guy off the court just to see him in possibly his last college season has been a lot of fun to watch.

Widman:

Thank you very much.
