New York City is looking at capping the number of Uber drivers in the city. NCC's Jonathan LaRowe details the possible effects this might have.

(TRACK 1)

The New York City City Council wants to limit the number of Uber drivers in the area. The Council is looking at implementing a 12-month freeze which would prevent new drivers from joining the app. Syracuse Uber driver, Yunion Ceballo used to drive for Uber in New York City. He does admit driving in New York City is much worse than Syracuse.

"New York city is fast. I prefer driving here. When I was driving in New York City, traffic is terrible."

(Track 2)

While Ceballo acknowledged the traffic in New York City is a nightmare, he says he does not support the City Council's proposal. He says limiting Uber drivers would not be fair to the people that rely on its affordability.

"Uber driving is a very nice way for the people. It's not expensive, it's very cheap. Everybody likes Uber drivers."

(Track 3)

New York City would be the first major city to put a cap on Uber drivers. Jonathan LaRowe, N-C-C News.
